THE WORLD OF LEARNING

is the well-known guide to the academic, scientific and cultural life of every country in the world. It lists their universities, colleges, libraries, museums, learned societies, scientific and research institutions, etc., and gives the names of professors, deans and principals, curators and librarians, as well as other important information in great detail. It is the only existing reference book of its kind in any language.

"Within this volume there is to be found much information that can otherwise only be assembled by laborious research."—The Economist, London, England.

"This valuable reference book has been compiled upon an admirably efficient plan."—The Scotsman, Glasgow, Scotland.

". . . it is recommended for large public, university and society libraries which require such material in a separate volume."—Subscription Books Bulletin (American Library Association), Chicago, Ill.

"Altogether a very useful reference book for cultural and educational organisations."—The Cape Times, Cape Town, South Africa.

"The World of Learning should prove a useful addition to the reference libraries of universities and colleges." —South China Morning Post, Hong Kong.

"The importance of such a guide need not be stressed; it will satisfy a long-felt need in educational circles all over the world."—Egyptian Bulletin, London, England.

". . . excels its predecessor in size and comprehensiveness as a work of reference on the educational, scientific, and cultural institutions of the world." —Manchester Guardian, Manchester, England.

"The editors have solved the problem of giving orderly presentation to comprehensive information."—Birmingham Post, Birmingham, England.

FOREWORD

The International Who's Who, now in its thirteenth year, is too well established to need any special introduction. The development of international co-operation during 1948, exemplified in the creation of such organisations as the Economic Co-operation Administration and the Organisation for European Economic Co-operation, emphasises the necessity for an international biographical reference work, and the editors have been able to include in this edition many who are playing an active part in these and similar organisations.

One of the major difficulties with which the editors have had to contend in the past twelve months has been the continued instability of Governments in many countries. Ministers and Ministries have come and gone with disconcerting frequency, so that almost overnight fresh questionnaires have had to be despatched to distant destinations in order to obtain biographical details for inclusion in the current volume.

The editors wish to draw attention to the innovation in this edition whereby a special section is devoted to the Royal Families of the World.

The response to past editions of this work encourages us to believe that The International Who's Who does meet the ever-growing need for concise, accurate and up-to-date information about the world's most eminent living personalities.

We wish to express our thanks to all those who, by completing questionnaires or by correcting proofs sent to them, have enabled us to bring our information up to date, and to remind the others that, unless proofs are returned, no responsibility can be accepted for the accuracy of their biographical sketches.

January 1949.
